Our Commitment

Led by accomplished and motivated individuals grounded in collaboration, Integral is committed to creating an equitable, diverse, and inclusive environment for our staff, clients, and the communities we serve. With these core principles guiding the work we do, we are committed to working with our clients and partners to ensure environmental justice is upheld in all communities.

At a time when people are demanding environmental, governmental, and social action, as well as effective corporate social responsibility efforts, Integral understands that comprehensive internal environmental justice policies and early and effective community engagement yield results. Moreover, we understand that solutions are not one size fits all, but rather need to be project-, community-, and industry-specific. Putting our beliefs into action, Integral has compiled this State by State Environmental Justice Compendium to help clients navigate the network of different approaches to environmental justice across the U.S.

Environmental Justice Initiatives

EPA DEFINES ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE AS...

“...the fair treatment and meaningful involvement of all people regardless of race, color, national origin, or income with respect to the development, implementation and enforcement of environmental laws, regulations and policies.”

In 1994, under Executive Order 12898, environmental justice was recognized as a federal initiative administered by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Since then, the environmental justice movement has expanded, becoming a focus for many state regulatory agencies. Recognizing that marginalized groups, including People of Color and low income communities,* bear the burden of the most polluted areas in the country, many state agencies are dedicated to ensuring equal representation in environmental issues and protecting from environmental harm.

Principles of environmental justice, first expressed 30 years ago at the First National People of Color Environmental Leadership Summit, have returned to center stage in 2021. The Biden Administration and Michael Regan, Administrator of the EPA, have elevated the importance of environmental justice through wide-ranging actions, including creation of two related White House councils, legislation to provide funding under the American Rescue Plan Act, development of guidance for cumulative impact assessment that reflect environmental justice concerns, and directives to all offices within EPA (<https://joebiden.com/environmental-justice-plan/>).

At the state level, currently, there is no standard framework for developing environmental justice programs, which has led to myriad approaches to environmental justice across state agencies. Some states have started enacting their own laws whereas others have included environmental justice into existing provisions for protection of public health. With so much variability, understanding each state’s existing environmental justice programs, objectives, and guiding regulations can be a challenging but vitally important component in assessing and mitigating environmental health risk to overburdened communities and is/will be a key policy driving environmental justice agenda for many states.

Integral Consulting Inc. conducted an evaluation of environmental justice initiatives and regulations in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and all U.S. territories. Information was collected through standardized internet searches and compiled for each state and territory to the extent that information was publicly available. This document presents Integral’s findings on environmental programs in each state and territory.

*Accurately naming affected populations is incredibly important in the context of environmental justice. For this reason we have identified these specific naming conventions with use of italics throughout.
